6. Five percent of the soldiers belonged to the 1936 class; 25 percent to the 1935 class; 30 percent to the 1934 class; 30 percent to the 1933 class; and 10 percent to older classes.
7. The men included 90 percent who served less than three years and 10 percent serving three to five years. After early October 1953, the strength of the unit was increased by continuous inductions of recruits whose number was 40 to 50 percent of authorized strength on 1 December 1953, the date of the beginning of the new training year. 2
8. Thirty-five percent of the soldiers came from Saxony/Anhalt; 30 percent from Saxony; 15 percent from Thuringia; 5 percent from Mecklenburg; 10 percent from Brandenburg; and 5 percent from Berlin.
9. Twenty percent of the men were loyal communists; 50 percent were indifferent; 20 percent were passive opponents; and 10 percent were active opponents. Their morale was poor because of long duty, limited leave, isolated live and arrogance by and better food for officers.
10. Lieutenant Colonel Levin (fnu), and an unidentified lieutenant colonel were assigned to the D 2-Kommando as Soviet advisers. They watched service activities, but did not personally interfere with training. They discussed details with the officers involved.
11. Training with the instruction company commenced on about 15 November 1953 and consisted of infantry basic training up to company level, infantry tactics up to squad level, marksmanship training and political indoctrination. 3
1. Comment. The engineer regiment commanded by Wronski (fnu), which is subordinate directly to the MdI/KVP, is confirmed in Kietz with a size of about 800 men prior to late December 1953. The unit was stationed at Kuechensee prior to late August. 25X1
2. Comment. The strength of the unit was increased due to the new recruiting program which was intensified in September 1953. 25X1
3. Comment. Winter training with the other units commenced in early December 1953. 25X1
